POISONING IN CATTLE

few cattle are being poisoned by eating water hemlock. The warm spring weather has been particularly favourable for the rapid growth of this plant. Water hemlock is found in local patches throughout Alberta in low, wet marsh ground. The shoots of water hemlock are the first succulent plants to appear in and around sloughs, and are therefore especially appetizing to cattle which have been on dry forage all winter. The first shoots of the plant are

The undersides of the plants are pale green. It is advisable to keep cattle away from alonghills and low places until the grass is well started.

Cattle which have eaten hemlock will show symptoms of poisoning within an hour, unless a small am-count only has been consumed. Frothing at the mouth and pronounced uneasiness occur. The animal falls to the ground, violent convulsions take place accompanied by clamping of the jaws and gnashing of teeth; breathing is hurried and irregular, and the pupil of the eye is dilated. The large amount of poison contained in the plant makes it almost impossible to use medicinal remedies with beneficial results. Prevention is the best safeguard.

Until there is good grass in your pastures it is well to keep cattle

British Secret Service

Questions Cannot Be Asked In Parliament About Money Expended
 Money is being placed at the disposal of the British secret service.
 During 1939 Britain will spend £800,000 ($2,000,000) on this vital service as against £500,000 ($1,250,000) in 1938 and £18,000 ($45,000) in 1937.

To-day Britain is spending as much as the secret service as she had before the war.
 Only two men in all Britain know how the money is spent and the results it brings.

However large the amount of money needed by the present secret service nor a single question may be answered in parliament about it. It was made official by the House of Commons that the secret service takes its stand on the principle that it does not want to be asked.

"Questions cannot be answered about the secret service because if they were it would no longer be secret."
 The only two men who know all about the secret service are Sir Robert Vauxhall, the cabinet's chief diplomatic adviser, and Sir Alexander Macdonald, the chief of the secret service at the foreign office.

Only one of the highest military officials holds it a point not to inquire too closely into the service, for he who was once a secretary at the foreign office, was once a member of the secret service.

The active head of the secret service is another person, a man of great importance. He holds a post that does not have a title like the others. From the desks in his office he does not know his real responsibilities.

The activity of the secret service is interesting to the secret service. Absence of purchases of certain articles, by the secret service, is not to be interpreted as the indication of a strategic character is always kept secret.
